

MILLENNIUM GATE MUSEUM

Millennium Gate as a production location venue for film & television

The Millennium Gate is the winner of the 2006 Palladio Award for design of a public space and showcases world-class architecture and art that draws Atlanta citizens and visitors from around the globe. The Millennium Gate, a 101-foot tall monumental arch, is situated on axis with 17th Street in the Atlantic Station development, which provides a dramatic setting as it is approached. People are drawn to the arch not only for its beauty, but also by its setting at the edge of a new park against a 3 acre lake. It is embellished with sculptural allegory presenting the story of peaceful accomplishment over the last 2000 years. It is the largest public monument to be built since the construction of the Jefferson Memorial. The Millennium Gate is not only a work of art, but also, a cutting edge educational tool. We concentrate on a three-fold story: first, the peaceful accomplishment of the last 2000 years; second, the history of Georgia; and third, the city and how, because of a credo different than other regional cities, Atlanta became a giant, globally important city in a relatively short period of time.

The Museum site offers location managers a wide choice of locations including the beautiful grounds, the galleries, the glass-walled Roof Conservatory, and the Rhodes Robinson Room. All locations can easily be transformed into a range of scenes.

All money generated by hire of the Millennium Gate Museum goes towards its conservation and care and to the development of the ongoing education, events, and exhibitions programs.
